The sun rises and sets on a world of wax—a changing world, void of permanence, shaped and remolded by active people.

The sun shines on countless campus worlds which mold and shape the lives of their citizens—preparing them for creative futures.

THE SUN ALSO SHINES on Brigham Young University, and its students train and leave, ready to cast their Coucar shadows into niches of meaningful reality.

Even small things can create huge shadows. The sun isver-present, never discriminating, and shines on everything. It is the intercepting object that decides the shadow's size and impact. Shadows are static and only move and change when their creators choose. They reflect, not dictate, the progress of their masters.

BUT SUN CAN BE STIFLED by clouds that eliminate shadow. So, too, some people remain stagnant and stay beneath clouds of ignorance.

College is the time to chisel away binding obscurities and become reflective of reason and knowledge. And wisdom comes from experience gained from practical application of learned principles. The purpose of BYU is to train its population to reach out and touch the world, to chance and rescreate—to send their shadows out.

CAST A COUGAR SHADOW . . . Each year thousands of Y alumni do this. BYU graduates are respected and admired in the wax world of today. Niches of enthusiasm, integrity, talent and skills are cast constantly and vibrate as shadows of inspiration. And of this, the world is aware.

Through Homecoming 1967 and the years to come, BYU will cast the Cougar shadow for the world to remember.
